All Must Learn to Do Disagreeable Tasks

Your Work Holds Key to Length of Life

Your chance of living long depends on the kind of job you have. Therefore, it is important that you pick an occupation that will agree with your physical well-being.

The highest death rates from all causes are found among hostlers and stable-hands. In contrast to this fact, garage workers have a death rate which is one-fifth that of the hostlers and stable-hands.

Aviators, as might be expected, have a very high death rate, namely, 28.73 per thousand employed, in contrast with a figure of 6.19 for chauffeurs and of 17.5 for teamsters.

The death rate among school teachers is low—4.4; and the occupation of firemen is not hazardous, as indicated by a rate of 6.7. The professions are all in the figures between 7 and 11—lawyers and judges being 7.8; clergymen, 10.3, and doctors 10.69.

About as safe an occupation as any one can have with a view to living long is that of college professor or president. For these the rate is 2.69 per thousand employed.

It is interesting to find that doctors commit suicide much more often than do lawyers, judges, or justices—the latter being below average and the doctors above the average.

These figures in relationship to occupation are of great importance in the selection of suitable occupations for those who are physically below a standard. The occupation with a low death rate is the one for the man who has difficulty in withstanding stress or exposure.

Another factor that has to be taken into account, associated with death rates of different occupations, is the average income in these occupations. The chance of living long is dependent not only on the amount of work a man does, but also on his ability to get sufficient rest, proper food, fresh air, and exercise.

For example, the lowest rates from tuberculosis are always found in those with the highest incomes and the highest number of deaths in those with low incomes and a poor standard of living.

A BOOK A DAY

This Corpse Simply Wouldn't Stay Put—"Still Dead" Is Fine Thriller For Mystery Fans

If you are a detective-story fan, here is good news for you: Ronald Knox has written a new thriller—"Still Dead" (Dutton: $2)—and it is added proof that he can leave most other detective story writers at least a city block behind when he sets himself to it.

This yarn has to do with the scion of a decaying Scots family who is found dead on the road in front of the ancestral acres. After being found, his body mysteriously vanishes—no appear again on the same spot two days later.

An insurance investigator, sent up to find out just when the young man really did kick off, digs up one of the cleverest and most puzzling tales you could care to read.

Father Knox not only devises plots of remarkable ingenuity, he injects a dry humor and an ability at the sketching character that would make his books entertaining even if they contained no mystery.

Another good one is Agatha Christie's "Murder in Three Acts" (Dodd, Mead: $2). This one deals with a series of queer poisonings in English society, brings in the famous French sleuth, Hercule Poirot—and winds up with one of Miss Christie's patented endings, guaranteed to bring a surprise to the most judicious reader.

If you prefer fact to fiction, you might like "Enter Murderers," by Edward Hale Bierstadt (Doubleday-Dorland: $2.50). Mr. Bierstadt has assembled ten or a dozen representative American murders and has described them with great gusto. Two or three of them are really something special in the way of crime.

Exercise to Get Good at Figures—Even Professional Dancers Must Do their Daily Dozens

If there's any doubt in your mind as to the value of lumbering and stretching as well as reducing exercises, you have only to look at the figures of professional dancers. The girls who entertain you on stage and screen, whether they are in a large chorus or out front doing specialty routines, always practice not only their actual dancing steps but various exercises that keep figures trim, muscled and supple.

For instance, one exercise that members of the famous Albertina Rasch ballet do consistently strengthens the muscles of the abdomen, makes the back limber and graceful and actually reduces the legs. You can practice it in your own home. Here are the directions:

Stand erect with heels together and arms at your sides. Raising the arms to shoulder level in front of you and keeping the legs together, bend the knees. Hold the position for a few seconds and then, using the back and stomach muscles, pull the body upward to a standing position. Let the arms drop slowly. Repeat 20 times.

The Claw of the Forgotten Murder

By CARLETON KENDRAKE

Copyright 1934 by Carleton Kendrake

BEGIN HERE TODAY

When DAN BLEEKER, publisher of The Blade, learned that CHARLES MORRIS, police reporter, had been mysteriously killed he determined to employ SIDNEY GRIFF, famous criminologist, to solve the murder.

Morden had been assigned to learn all he could about FRANK B. CATHAY, wealthy and prominent, who had threatened to sue The Blade because the newspaper reported Cathay had been arrested. Later it was proven that the man arrested, giving the name of Cathay and accompanied by a girl called MARY BRIGGS, was an impostor. The Blade published a retraction.

Then Morden found dead and a few hours later came news that Cathay is dead—possibly poisoned.

Sidney Griff undertakes the case. He goes to see CHARLES FISHER, Cathay's lawyer, and then to Cathay's home. There he sees CARL RACINE, private detective, leaving in Cathay's car. The chauffeur says hostilely to Griff, "You can't see Mrs. Cathay."

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XIV

THE chauffeur wormed back behind the wheel of the big car. The gear shift lever snapped home and the automobile, with Racine, the detective, inside, slid smoothly down the driveway, progressing as effortlessly as a trout gliding through the dark depths of a forest pool.

Sidney Griff watched the car until it had turned the corner of the block. Then he stepped to the doorknob and a moment later was handing his card to a solemn-faced butler who assured him that Mrs. Cathay was receiving no one.

"You will tell her," said Sidney Griff, "that I have no wish to intrude upon her grief. It is, however, important that I see her. You will explain to her that I am a criminologist and that if she can grant me an audience now it may save her much inconvenience later."

The butler took his card, showed him into a reception hallway. As Griff waited he looked about him, noting the Chinese rug on the floor, the dark wood table and chairs of solid, Tudor design, the maroon silk draperies reaching to the floor. Through the doorway he could see the living room and caught a glimpse of a fireplace with a mirror above the mantel. The furnishings looked expensive. Everything about the house looked expensive and characterless—the typical home turned out by a fashionable interior decorator who knew how to please wealthy clients.

It was only a few moments before the butler was back with the information that Mrs. Cathay would see Mr. Griff.

The interior of the house was hushed and there was about it the aura of death. A musty smell struggled with the cloying odor of flowers that were dying, and, in turn, were used to ornament death. Griff saw a maid in the next room, noted that the servants walked around on tiptoe, with strained, set faces.

GRIFF followed the butler. In the midst of the atmosphere of hushed restriction the healthy thudding of the criminologist's footsteps were as the influx of an outside life, pushing aside decaying tissues, dispelling dead atmospheres with the tang of a salty sea breeze.

The butler led the way to a smaller room back of the living room. Mrs. Cathay was there, stretched in a reclining chair. A face was drawn about her. Her face was white and the eyes were dark-rimmed. Her hands seemed like white wax and there was something piteously pathetic in the woman's eyes as she stared at the criminologist. They were eyes that held curiosity, grief, tragedy, and—more than all—the dark lustre of fear.

"Please be seated," she said. Sidney Griff thanked her, dropped to a chair.

"Believe me, Mrs. Cathay," he said, "I had no wish to intrude upon your grief. I came to make a suggestion and a suggestion merely."

"What is it?" she asked. "That you will not," he said, "oppose an autopsy."

She shuddered and said nothing. "I have," said the criminologist, "discussed certain phases of the case with your attorney, Mr. Charles Fisher. He tells me that a hurried settlement was completed with The Blade because your husband was taken seriously ill, and you both attributed that illness to mental anxiety caused by the article which had been published."

"Not because of the article," said Mrs. Cathay. "Not because of that alone but because of the tactics of the newspaper people. They were going to blacken Frank's reputation by every means in their power and Frank's reputation was all that he had to live for. Money meant but little to him. That which he prized more than all was his reputation and standing in the community."

HER voice was weak and toneless, without animus, without enthusiasm, without vigor. She spoke as one would speak of a thunder shower which had passed after doing damage to some prize bed of flowers.

"Did you," asked Griff, "let your husband know that you were going to the city to negotiate a settlement?"

She stared at him steadily. "Why do you want me to answer that question?" she asked.

"Let it go," he told her, his eyes now focused upon her pale lips. "It is, perhaps, of no matter. But would you mind telling me why you and your husband became so greatly concerned over the fact that a reporter was making an investigation for the purpose of determining facts about Mr. Cathay's reputation?"

"How do you mean?" she asked. "Was there," he asked, "some specific fact that you were afraid the reporter would uncover?"

"Certainly not. My husband's life has been an open book."

"Then why were you so afraid of what the reporter might uncover?" "It wasn't what he might uncover," she said. "It was the idea of the thing; the loss of prestige; the loss of dignity; the certain knowledge that some shrewd attorney would twist and distort the little incidents, the minor matters, so as to make them seem big and important."

"What little incident? What minor matter?" pressed Griff.

She said nothing. The corners of her lips quivered.

"Please," she said. "You didn't come here to bait me, but to ask me something or to tell me something. Please get it over with and go."

Griff's voice was low-pitched and confidential.

"I want to ask you," he said, "if you knew that the reporter who had been sent by the newspaper to investigate your husband's reputation was murdered, and his body was found yesterday afternoon?"

Griff's voice was low-pitched and confidential.

"I want to ask you," he said, "if you knew that the reporter who had been sent by the newspaper to investigate your husband's reputation was murdered, and his body was found yesterday afternoon?"

"Yes," he said. "You hadn't heard about it?"

"Murdered!" she said. "Oh my God!"

She dropped back against the chair and lay very still and very motionless.

Griff went to her side, felt her pulse, went to the door of the room and jerked it open. A maid was standing within a few feet of the door, her face flushed.

"Your mistress," said Griff, "has fainted. See what you can do for her."

The maid stared at him accusingly.

"I think," said Griff, "you had better telephone for a physician."

He raised his voice slightly as he made the suggestion, and then turned to regard the still form which reclined in the overstuffed chair. That form stirred. A weak voice said, "No, I don't want a physician. Get me some brandy, Marie."

Griff faced the maid once more. "Under the circumstances," he said, "I will not make any further calls to your mistress. Please tell her that I have gone and that I am grateful for the interview."

The maid said nothing but stared at him with hostile, sullen eyes as Griff found his way out of the house. The butler reached the front door just as Griff had stepped to the porch.

Griff walked rapidly down the cement to the place where his taxi-cab was waiting.

"Get me," he said to the driver, "to a public telephone where I can put in a long distance call. Don't lose any time."

Cochrane Is Most Valuable Player

Detroit Catcher-Manager Wins American League Honor

CHICAGO — (AP) — For the second time in six years, Mickey Cochrane Thursday was named the most valuable player in the American League by a committee representing the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

The Detroit manager, who piloted the Bengals to their first American League pennant in 25 years only to lose the world's championship in the final game, won the honorary award by a two-vote margin over his star second baseman, Charlie Gehringer. Mickey's vote total was 67 to Gehringer's 65.

Other leaders were Vernon Gomez, New York, 60; Schoolboy Rowe, Detroit, 59; and Lou Gehrig, New York, 54. Jimmy Foxx of the Athletics, winner of the award during the past two years, was tenth with 11 votes. Babe Ruth was missing for the first time while not a Washington player was named in the complete roll of 38 names.

Cochrane's selection gave the major league a great battery combination with their respective "most valuable" player awards as Jerome Herman (Dizzy) Dean, St. Louis Cardinal star, won the National League award with almost a perfect score.

In his first year at the helm of the Tigers, Cochrane led the team from fifth place to the pennant. The Detroit club was so pleased with his record that it handed him a $10,000 bonus.

VALUES

Few people realize the true value of their newspaper. To them it has become such a commonplace item in their daily routine that they give no thought to the actual cost of producing their paper, or to the actual value they receive by its daily appearance in their homes.

But, if they could visualize the vast amount of capital that is invested in news services, special features, distant correspondents, typesetting and printing equipment, and the thousand and one other items that go to make a daily paper interesting, timely and accurate, they would be amazed at their ability to purchase their paper for a few cents.

And, this costly and valuable service is made possible by those merchants and manufacturers who consistently advertise in your paper's columns. To them is justly due your patronage, for they are making it possible for you to receive a complete and comprehensive digest of local and world wide events each day.

"While I do not wish anything I say to be understood to growing out of these conversations," continued Senator Robinson, "I can say that in the matter of unemployment relief Germany has been performing the task well but for the future the problems are more difficult."

"It appears to me that Hitler is not able to accomplish his mission in the way of procuring essential raw materials. Germany will be faced with increased unemployment."

Senator Robinson said he found "great interest everywhere in the methods employed by the Roosevelt administration for the promotion of national recovery."

"I thought I saw evidence," Senator Robinson said, "of mitigation or modification of the Jewish policy of the Hitler regime. I also believe that for the establishment of better relations between Germany and foreign powers those in authority in Germany are considering measures and policies which may be termed conservative."

a touchdown, turning back the Wildcats three times. On the fourth down, Saltonstall scooted around end and over the chalk line. Wells kicked goal and the Wildcats were out in front with a 7-point lead.

Hope received, and things began to happen fast and furious. The Bobcats, more determined than ever, loosening a fast breaking offense, featuring Payne, Madison and Spears. Payne, first to carry the ball, went around end for 15 yards. Madison picked up several yards around the other end and then Spears hit the line for 8 yards. Madison dropped back on the next play, shot a long pass to Anderson who was in a clear field. The pass was good for 40 yards and a touchdown. Hope failed to kick goal, and El Dorado was still leading by a single point.

The Bobcats received and marched to the four-yard line where they recovered. To start the rush, Spears recovering. To start the rush, Spears hit the line for a first down, placing the ball in mid-field. Spears found another hole and plunged for 10 yards. Madison, on a wide end run, made 20 yards. Spears found a big hole in the line and plunged for 8 more yards leaving the ball on El Dorado's 12-yard line. Hope was thrown for a 5-yard loss, but came back in three attempts at the line to place the ball 4 yards from the goal where a fumble ended a determined 60-yard touchdown attempt as the whistle ended the third quarter.

El Dorado, backed up behind her own goal, punted out. Hope worked the ball back to the 15 yard line on an assortment of plays, and then a reverse play, Payne to Madison was good for 15 yards and a touchdown.

The Bobcats failed to make extra point, but had overcome a lead by scoring twice in a beautiful exhibition of football. The balance of the quarter was played near mid-field, with neither team making another serious threat.

Captain Kennedy, at right end, played a great defensive game and made several nice running catches. Ramsey, at the other end and a new comer to the Bobcats, played well. Moore, Anderson, F. Stone and Owens, linemen, tore through the Wildcat forward wall to stop plays at the line of scrimmage on many occasions.

The team as a whole was more steady, and played alert football with the exception at the start of the second half when El Dorado converted a quick kick into a touchdown.

Hope lost 40 yards through penalties. El Dorado was set back 10 yards. Hope attempted seven passes, completing four, and had two intercepted. El Dorado attempted six, completed two and had one intercepted.

FRAMEUP REFUTED

get personal service on me, and the only question the said court could have decided on constructive service would have been as to the divorce.

He says that he has nothing to say against the police and sheriff, then says that my attorney and I demanded that unless he sign the papers to withdraw his divorce action against me in California and waive all his rights for the custody of our child, they would force the law to hold me in jail until the Grand Jury meets next January. This is certainly a reflection on the sheriff and all the officers of the court. I am sure that not any one acquainted with the officers of the court and Judge of the Municipal Court would think for one minute that my attorney and I or anyone else, could force or persuade said officers to hold a man in jail on a fictitious charge, and yet that in substance is what he is charging against the officers.

He asks the question why a step-grandfather not get protection from the police when the custody of our child has not been given to him. I might answer by saying that if he, without any intention to take our child away from me, would on the impulse of the moment, as he says, try once to take him away, I have every reason to believe that he might do it again.

I have much evidence to sustain my contention with respect to our controversy, but I am sure the general public is as interested in it as I am doing what I think anyone should do, submitting this matter to the court, and shall be perfectly willing to abide by its decision.

He would attempt to lead the public to believe that if the custody of our child is awarded to me that he is forever barred from obtaining custody of our child. He knows full well, as most everybody knows, that the sole and only purpose of the court has in mind when questions like this is presented, is as to what would be for the best interest of the child; and there is no such thing as a permanent order as to the custody of children. The court has the power and authority to change such orders at any time the facts and circumstances justify. I have tried to be reasonable and fair, as to whether he sincerely desires to see our baby and loves him as he would lead the public to believe, I shall not attempt to judge. But I am willing to be charitable, and say at least for the sake of argument, that he does want to see our child, yet I do not think it unreasonable that he should call to see him at reasonable hours. He complains about not being able to see our baby when he arrived in Hope, which was 9:30 o'clock Thursday night. I advised him that it was too late in the night and that he could see him the next morning. He did see the baby the next morning and the next day, and attempted to take him away from me Friday night.

He apparently wants to make charges against everybody when they want to interfere with him. I am surprised that he has not made charges against our daily press, which I am sure everybody will agree attempts to be fair to everybody, as in said paper on the date of the 17th instant refers to his "efforts to kidnap his 2-year-old son."

I am reluctant to attempt to answer his allegations as this is a private matter, and the public I am sure is not interested, but in defense of the officers and the people who stand for a fair deal, I have written this letter, and shall have no more to say through the press about the matter.

Respectfully,

Mrs. Collar Walters

gasoline tax was collected by Oregon, we might have succeeded in establishing a uniform, reasonable tax of, say, three cents a gallon.

"In Arkansas, the Petroleum Industries Committee and your state association are co-operating in a determined battle against tax evasion and against diversion of the revenue thus collected to other than road-building purposes.

"And, of course, we are united in the fight for elimination of federal, county, and municipal gasoline taxes from an already heavily over-taxed industry."

Schoolboy Rowe and Bride Home

From Indiana Home
Evansville, Ind., Home of Fox

EL DORADO, Ark.—The Schoolboy and Edna returned home Thursday night.

The ace of the Detroit Tigers' pitching staff and his bride arrived in El Dorado at 7 p. m., after driving 600 miles from Evansville, Ind., where they have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Pete Fox since shortly after the world series.

The Rowes made the trip to El Dorado in a sedan presented to them by a motor company.

Asked as to his plans for the winter, Rowe said that he planned to spend a great deal of the time hunting and fishing. He said that he and Edna will go to Texas in a short time to visit relatives and then will return to El Dorado for the remainder of the winter. Fox, he said, will come to El Dorado November 15 for a visit.

"My arm feels great," Rowe said. "I haven't had a warm-up since last Friday at Detroit and except for 36 holes of golf at Evansville Wednesday I haven't had a workout. However, that drive today was a pretty good workout."

"Mickey Cochrane is a great leader," he said. "They don't make them any better. If a fellow has anything in him at all, Mickey will bring it out. Mickey won't have anything to do with a guy that has to be petted."

"These two Dean brothers are great fellows. Paul is a better pitcher than Dizzy but Dizzy is more boastful about what he does. Dizzy isn't conceited as he seems from newspaper stories. He is a mighty likeable fellow personally and most of that bragging stuff is just for show. However, he likes to have fun and play jokes."

Homecoming will be celebrated here for Rowe Monday and Tuesday.

A 70-year-old Hungarian farmer wanted to be put into an asylum for merrymaking 50 years ago. A wise bird, to wait 30 years before letting it be known he was crazy then.

Actress Stirs Hitler Interest, Paris Gossips

Bachelor Adolf Hitler at last has found time to turn from the affairs of state to take an interest in a woman—a half-Jewish woman—It rumors from Paris have a basis in fact. The magnet is said to be Lena Riefenstahl, beautiful young actress and virtual dictator in the German film world, shown here as she recently supervised filming of the meeting of 50,000 members of the German labor corps at Nuremberg. She flew from there to Berlin in the hazy plane of the Nazi chancery and is reported to have attained remarkable influence with the Nazi regime.

Vick Co. Launches Advertising Drive

2 1/2 - Million - Dollar Campaign Testifies to Business Recovery

GREENEBORO, N. C. — Business conditions are improving, and indications are that the upturn will continue at an even swifter pace during the fall and winter months, President L. Richardson of the Vick Chemical Co. declared in an interview here Friday.

As an evidence that the Vick company is backing this opinion, Mr. Richardson pointed out that Vick's advertising appropriation for this season is larger than ever before—over $2,500,000.

An additional evidence that Vicks considers present conditions particularly auspicious is the fact that it is introducing a new small size of one of its products—Vicks Vapo-Rub, the unique aid in preventing colds. Vapo-Rub—the trade-mark name of Vicks Drops for nose and throat—is now featured on the package and in advertising to avoid confusion with other products that have followed in the wake of its success.

Mr. Richardson attributes much of the tremendous sales of Vick preparations—over 53,000,000 packages last season—to honest, consistent newspaper advertising of highly meritorious products.

"Our nearly 30 years of experience have convinced us that the newspaper provides the most flexible and reliable form of advertising," he stated. "Newspapers, as always, head the list of media we are using this season. Especially heavy schedules will be run in connection with introduction of the new size Vapo-Rub. This handy half-size package—convenient for instant use at any time or place—is now available at all drug stores, in addition to the regular large size."

As a result of far-sighted planning by the company's management, Vick policies during the depression have been diametrically opposed to those of many other concerns. Since 1929, Vicks has tripled its advertising while some companies were drastically curtailing theirs—or eliminating it entirely. It has introduced three new products and continued the aggressive merchandising that has always characterized its sales policies. And during these five turbulent years, sales of Vick products have increased more than 200 per cent. Instead of retrenching, Vicks has continued to expand.

Sales of Vicks Vapo-Rub, Mr. Richardson states, have increased steadily year after year, regardless of business conditions. For many years Vapo-Rub has been the world's most extensively used cold remedy—the family standard for treating colds in 68 countries. Similar international success is now being rapidly achieved by Vicks Vapo-Rub—companion to Vapo-Rub in Vicks plan for better control of colds.

Two other specialized Vick aids to better control of colds have been introduced since 1929 with outstanding success. Vicks Medicated Cough Drops were first presented in 1931. Their sales have established a record. Vicks Vaseline Antiseptic, which has set a new low price level for a quality mouth and gargle, was introduced only 18 months ago. Already more than 5,000,000 bottles have been sold.

Vicks would appear to be a shining example of business recovery through individual effort. Its expansion of business throughout the depression period has been accompanied by increased employment, shortened working hours, and maintenance of pay scales.

"Vicks has doubled its staff of employees since 1929," stated Mr. Richardson, "and throughout the depression has maintained salaries at the high 1929 levels."

COMPANY PAID FOR

$56,000,000 bill for his luckless war in the stock market with Cyrus Eaton, Cleveland capitalist.

Insull surrendered to Eaton, after a financial siege in 1930, and promised to pay $56,000,000, papers read Thursday to the jury trying Insull and 16 others for mail fraud indicated.

Then, the prosecution said, the management of Insull's Corporation Securities Company assumed the defeat. Minutes of a meeting on June 9, 1930, showed a promise "forever to protect" Insull from any loss. This action came from the Executive Committee of the Corporation Securities Company, including Insull, his son, Samuel, his brother, Martin J. Insull and H. L. Stuart.

As evidence that Insull never intended to bear any of the cost personally, Prosecutor Leslie E. Salter read an earlier entry.

"The chairman," it said, referring to the elder Insull, "said that he had made this trade with the idea that the stock would be taken over and paid

Roosevelt Drafts Veterans' Speech

President Speaks Friday at Roanoke Hospital Dedication

WASHINGTON — (AP) — President Roosevelt will speak Friday to dedicate a $1,700,000 veterans' hospital, the first to be built under this administration.

After dedicating the new hospital he will go to Williamsburg where he is to receive a degree from William & Mary college.

Drafts Speech

WASHINGTON — (AP) — President Roosevelt will seek Friday to reassure thousands of needy veterans of America's wars, delivering a message to this effect at the dedication of a $1,700,000 soldier hospital at Roanoke, Va.

Spending much of Thursday working on the address, the president sought to complete it Thursday night prior to departing for the South Friday morning. The journey will be extended to keep the president out of the capital until late Sunday.

Since his words Friday precede a little the American Legion convention at Miami next week, speculation had it that Mr. Roosevelt probably would touch on the bonus issue. There was general feeling, however, that he would not mention it.

Aides declare the president has maintained a generous attitude toward veterans injured in actual combat, and a less liberal policy toward those who could not trace their diseases and hurts to war duty. He has promised that distressed veterans and their families would be assisted in every way possible.

In the last session of Congress his veterans policy was overridden to the extent of putting back on the pension the compensation thousands of World and Spanish war veterans whose presumptive service-connected disabilities had been disallowed under the economy act.

Frank T. Haines, veterans administrator, who went over final arrangements for the president's trip at the White House last week, estimated that an additional $104,000,000 would be required to pay the expanded pension bill voted over the presidents' veto.

for by the Corporation Securities Company and Insull Utility Investments, Inc."

Anton had acquired some 160,000 shares of the choice operating companies of Insull's utility system. He demanded $400 a share at first, according to the minutes read Thursday, but sold for $350—far above the current market price. His purchases had endangered Insull's control of the concerns.

Prosecutors read the history of this financial war to support their claim that the Corporation Securities Company was drained to pay for the Insull-Eaton war.

The minutes for August 18 showed an agreement to take over half the stock Insull had "ransomed" from Eaton. To do it required more cash, and the corporation floated a $40,000,000 loan, selling serial gold notes to Halsey Stuart & Co.

Revolt Is Joined by Nazi Churchmen

Hitler's Own Followers Swing Over to Protestant Dissenters

BERLIN, Germany.—(P)—Revolt in the ranks of Nazi churchmen themselves threatened the rule of Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller and Dr. August Jaeger Thursday.

Spreading of the rebellion to the ranks of Chancellor Hitler's faithful became apparent with the formal protest of the Nazi Christians' leaders and lawyer, Christian Kinder.

Kinder expressed lack of confidence in Dr. Jaeger, Prussian commissioner of Protestant churches, after protesting to the Reichsbishop government.

He is supported by the most powerful Nazi bishops, Friedrich Koch of Saxony and Karl Thom of Pomerania. The Reichsbishop Supreme Council has not escaped the rebellious spirit. Pastors Christiansen and Langmann and Chief Church Councillor Birnbaum also demanded Jaeger's resignation.

The commissioner responded by dismissing them from office. The Rev. Fritz Engelke thereupon presented his resignation. Engelke is director of the Hamburg Mission house. He has been the Lutheran representative on Mueller's spiritual cabinet since February 23.

Hitler was reported to be so disappointed in Mueller that he cancelled an audience which had been arranged for Friday.

The more conservative among the Nazi Protestants now appear to realize that unity of the church, which the oppositionists also favor, cannot be vouchsafed by a Reichsbishop government which regularly produces a serious crisis and conflict.

Weekly Sunday School Lesson

Text: Matt. 6:5-15

The International Uniform School Lesson for Oct. 21
By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of Advance

It would solve most of our problems of prayer if we would give more heed to the teaching of Jesus and to His example, and concern ourselves less with conventional theories and practices.

Nothing seems harder than to rid the mind of the average Christian of the idea that prayer is primarily an asking for things or a method of getting things from God. Such a notion is against all the teaching, direct and implied, that Jesus gives us concerning God, His relationship to us, and our relationship to Him.

Elemental in this relationship is the fact that Jesus emphasized "the Father knoweth the things ye have need of before ye ask Him."

The God to whom we pray is a Father of love and mercy, who, above all things, is anxious to do for us the best that He can do. What He can accomplish in us, and what He can confer upon us, is limited by our willingness to receive and by the attitude that opens or closes the door of our hearts.

So it is that in our lesson we have the primary emphasis upon prayer as fellowship with God. That is the occasion of our praying that we may know God, and that we may so be transformed through knowledge of Him that we may be fitted to receive the gifts of His grace.

To know God is to share His life and His love. Inevitably in that knowledge the sense of our need changes. We are less ready to ask for the things that we might desire for ourselves in our earthly and worldly thought of prayer, and we are the more ready to perceive the greatest treasures that God has for us.

Prayer is not a form, nor is it a ritual, though we may use both form and ritual in prayer. Prayer is the secret aspiration of the soul toward God.

It may be expressed, or it may be so deep that the soul cannot express it, but can have only the inexpressible yearning that God can see and understand.

We should not pray to God as one who can be moved by persistent solicitations as some earthly minded person might be. The teaching of the parable of the importunate widow and the unjust judge, who heard her and granted her request because of her persistence, is not that God yields to our persistence to give us things that are out of harmony with His mercy and His grace, but that God, being merciful and gracious, is ready beforehand to bestow upon us the things that we are willing to receive.

The meaning of that parable is that if an unjust judge can be moved by much asking, how much more can God give to us His gifts where we are willing to ask and receive.

Our lesson suggests, however, that prayer should not all be left to unexpressed thought or feeling. Jesus taught His disciples to pray. He gave them a form of prayer in words that have come down to us rich in the beauty of their content and experience.

We should not only use the Lord's Prayer, but we should make it a model for our praying. It suggests the principles of true prayer, the complete surrender of the soul to the will of God and the divine purposes of love and forgiveness, and the aspiration for the good life in which men become like the God to whom they pray.

Millions Plunge Oil King Into Marriage Woe

His overnight rise from rags to riches brought tears and wretchedness to C. M. "Dad" Joiner, left, discoverer in 1930 of the vast East Texas oil field, the 74-year-old multi-millionaire "wildcatter," told a jury in Dallas, Tex., the other day, fighting the suit of Mrs. Lydia Joiner, extreme right, his first wife and mother of his five children, to set aside a property settlement of $500 a month and to regain a wife's half of his fabulous riches. Joiner's marriage to his pretty secretary, Miss Dea Engstrom, center, immediately after obtaining a Mexican divorce from his first wife in 1930, is attacked by Joiner's first mate, backed by their children. Both sides claimed victory after the jury's verdict on special issues and announced intention of filing motions for judgment.

Mileage Hints

By J. F. Winchester, S.A.E.
Supervisor of Motor Vehicle Equipment, Standard Oil Company of Louisiana

IN the early days of petroleum refining the motorist was sold the same type of gasoline in June as in January. Today this is not so. Now the large refiners fashion their gasoline to the season of the year. They know that a highly volatile gasoline will not be as efficient in the summer months as it is in the winter. Conversely, experience has proven that the ideal summer gasoline will not start easily in the winter. Temperatures definitely affect carburetion. Consequently, the refiners "tailor" motor fuel to the varying requirements of the different seasons.

In the past motorists had their carburetors adjusted with each change in season. Although some slight adjustment is advisable even today to compensate for changes in temperature between the warm summer months and the cold winter months, the motorist will not encounter great difficulties if these adjustments are not made. However, such adjustments will undoubtedly induce the more efficient operation of his engine.

Don't have your carburetor adjusted with the advent of the first day or so of cool weather. Wait until the cold weather has definitely set in. Then have a competent mechanic or carburetor expert do the job for you. In his experienced hands it will take but a few minutes and the small fee charged for this expert service may be saved through increased efficiency. In the meantime make it a practice to purchase your motor fuel only at service stations which dispense the products of reputable petroleum companies which refine their gasolines in accordance with the season of the year.

Stone Faces Murder Charge in White Plains Furnace Death

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.—(AP)—An indictment charging deliberate and premeditated murder against Lawrence C. Stone, 24, was voted Thursday by the Westchester grand jury which heard the details of the furnace death of 5-year-old Nancy Jean Costigan in a Mount Vernon apartment house basement Sunday afternoon.

Stone's confession, read to the jury, said:

"I choked her to death because of her screams."

In the confession Stone said he killed the child because he feared that her screams after she fell down while playing ball with him would be interpreted that the child was being attacked.

District Attorney Frank H. Coyne announced after the indictment that the state will contend that Stone attempted to attack the child.

Sister MARY'S KITCHEN

A Culinary Journey to Italy From Canape to Tortoni, Meat Has a Foreign Flavor

BY MARY E. DAGUE
NEA Staff Service Writer

Did you know that you may dine in the manner of any country you like these days right in your own home? Time was when American housekeepers looked askance at foreign dishes because they were suspected of being full of strange ingredients that nobody had on her pantry shelf or could get from the corner grocery.

But those days are gone forever. The tiniest food shop today has flavorings and seasonings from every corner of the globe, and the chefs are used greedily to conceal the secrets of their kitchens are pouring them out for the world to benefit by.

One of my family's favorite stops on our occasional fireside culinary journeys is Italy.

Use More Olive Oil
It is my conviction that the average American housewife should use more olive oil in her cooking than she does. Remember the old Romans who caused us so much trouble in our high school days fought their wars and wrote their commentaries on the facts cooked in olive oil. Chicken caecatori (hunter style) with spragetti makes a fine foundation for your Roman dinner.

Tomato and onion used in the chicken produce a highly flavored dish that makes it important to serve a full-flavored vegetable such as broccoli, loved by the Italians, with this meal.

The salad should be definite and crisp, no conglomeration of fruits and vegetables swathed in rich dressing. Any crisp salad green or a cabbage or celery salad offers the contrast needed to prepare the appetite for the dessert.

Crackers and one of the delicious foreign cheeses always is the perfect finish to the perfect meal, but if you want a sweet, use biscuit tortoni or my smooth ice cream.

Chicken Caecatori (Hunter Style)
One 2-1/2 chicken, 3-4 cup olive oil, 1 large onion, 4 cups chopped fresh tomatoes, one quart canned onions, 1 teaspoon thyme, 2 teaspoons salt.

Disjoint chicken. Heat oil in a frying pan, add chicken and cook over a brisk fire until well browned. Add onion peeled and chopped and cook until it is brown. Then add the tomatoes.

thyme and salt. Cook 30 minutes long-er and serve with boiled spraggetti using the sauce of the chicken over the spraggetti.

Biscuit Tortoni
One cup fine macaroon crumbs, 1 cup coffee cream, 1 cup heavy cream, 1-4 cup sugar, 1-4 cup sherry, few grains salt.

Soak one-half the macaroon crumbs and salt in thin cream for one hour. Add sherry and freeze to a mush. Then fold in cream whipped until firm and finish freezing. Pack in paper cases and cover with remaining macaroon crumbs. Put prepared cases in traps in iceless refrigerator and let stand an hour or longer until mold of freezer with stiff cardboard and wax paper between each layer, pack in four parts ice to one part ice cream salt, and let stand for two or three hours. Serve in the paper cases.
